

Dear friends,

With the Covid-19 situation, we are faced both with challenges and opportunities. The human part of us worries for our loved ones especially those who are medically vulnerable. Those who are open about their faith may face questions on whether it is appropriate to attend church or how far should we place the need of others before ourselves. When asked, I admit that I do not have an easy answer to these questions though I would also add that the needed response from us is much simpler – we ought to pray! There is much to pray about - from the healthcare workers battling at the frontlines to the affected families; for wisdom for our leaders in government, organisations we work in and our church ministers. And for ourselves, that His peace may be with us and our actions may reflect our trust in his all-sufficient grace and provision.

Our chaplain and dear brother, Rev Tan Soo Inn, has penned a short theological reflection which I commend to your reading. As many have noted, this too will pass. And when it does, may Christ be exalted by the testimony of our lives.

Blessings,

Siew Hor
